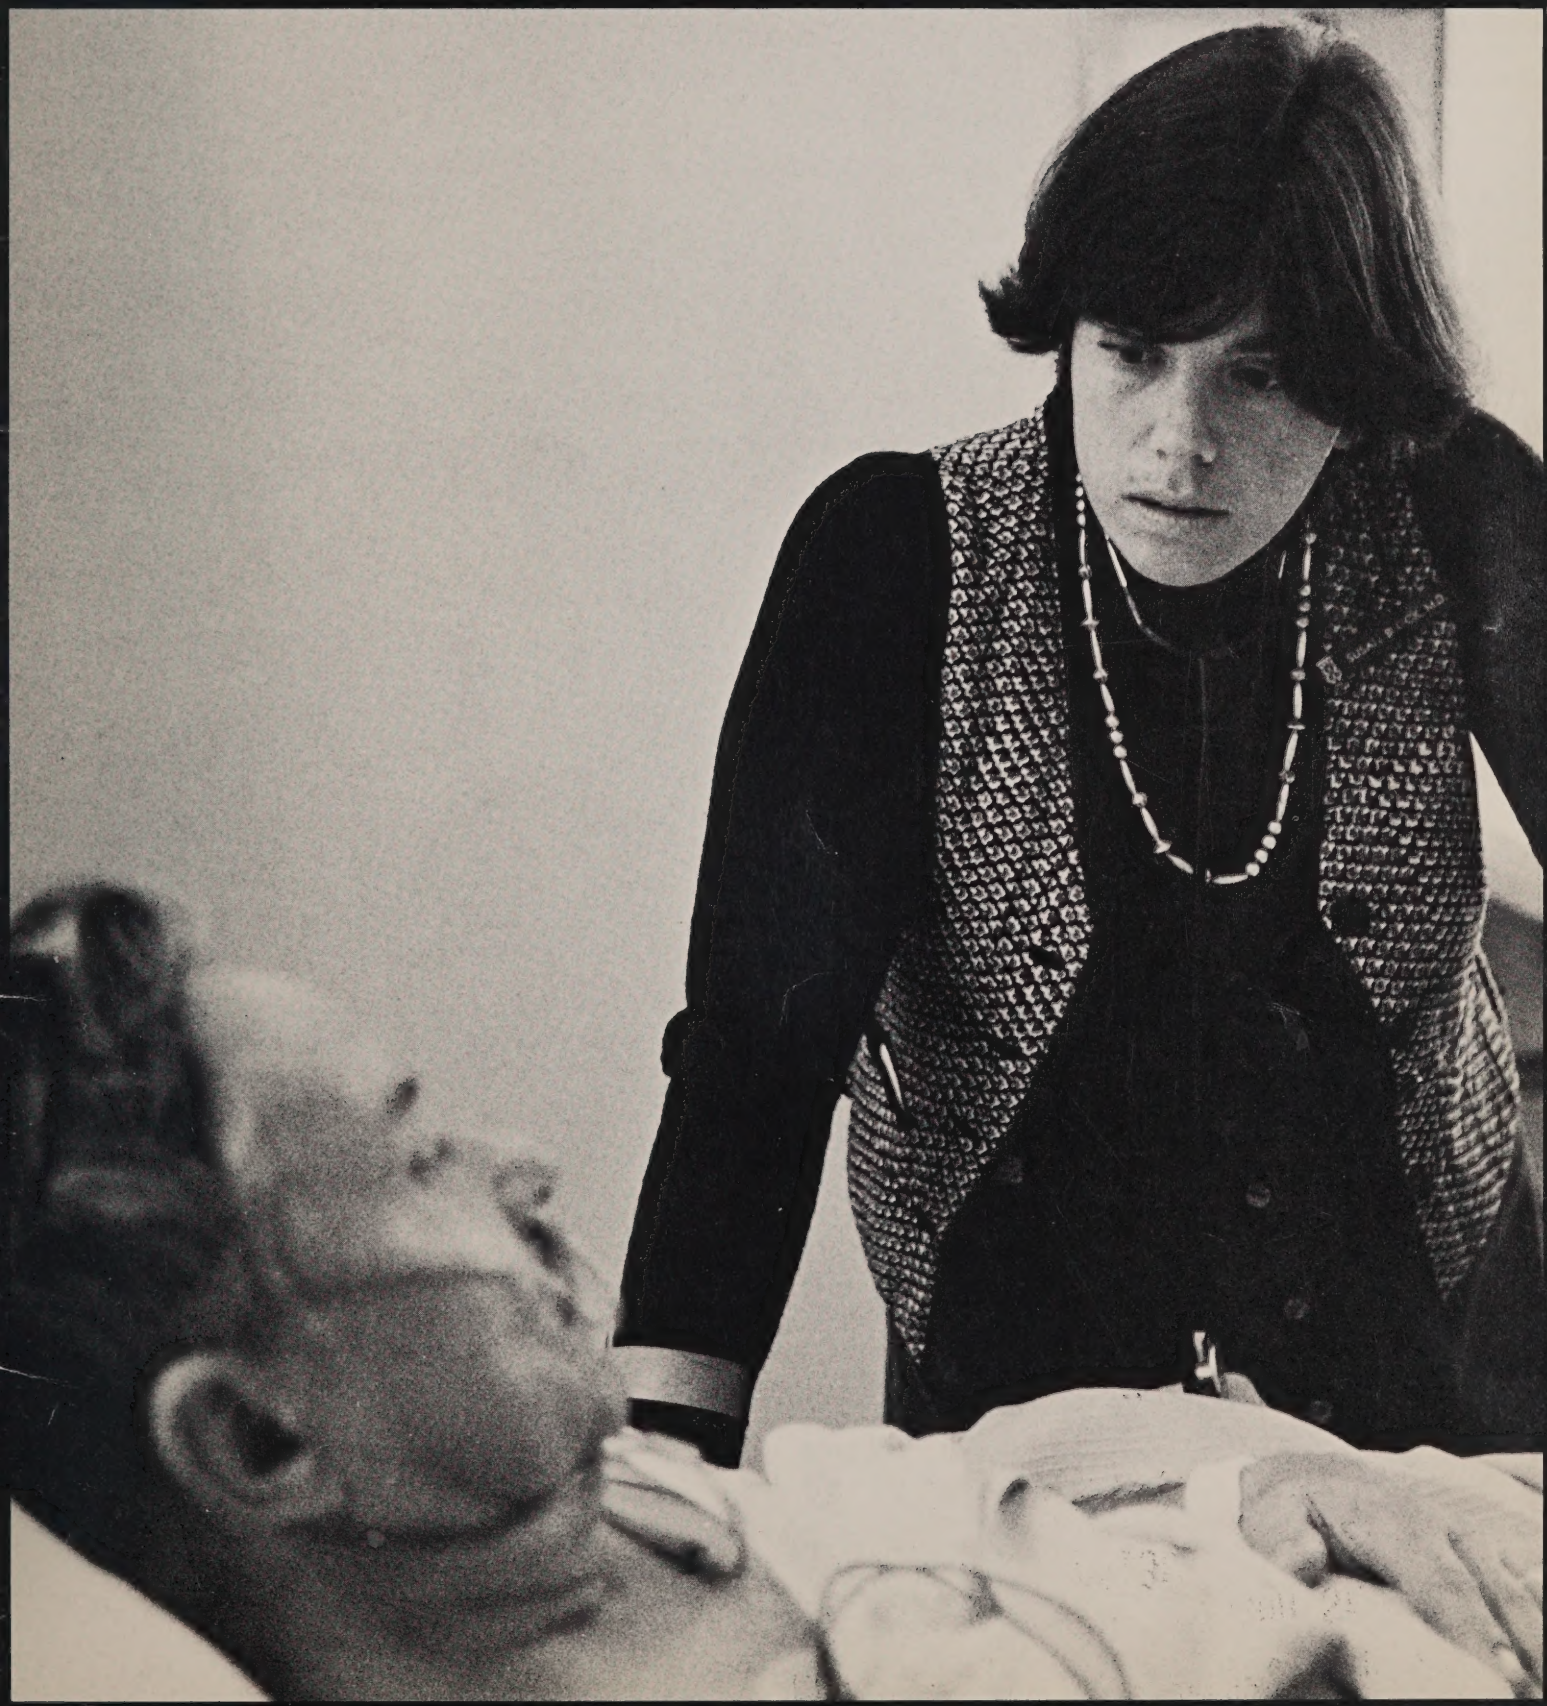
Beth Israel Hospital

Report of the 63rd Annual Meeting, December 3, 1978

Including Summary Statistics for Fiscal Year 1978



Introduction

The theme for Beth Israel Hospital's 63rd Annual Meeting was "Forward From Fifty" — marking the conclusion of a year celebrating a half-century as a major Harvard teaching Hospital and a half-century at its present location on Brookline Avenue in Boston. The meeting was held at the Marriott Hotel in Newton, and more than 500 friends and employees of the Hospital attended.

The Hospital's year was reviewed by Stanley H. Feldberg, president of the board of trustees, and Mitchell T. Rabkin, MD, general director. Contributions to the Hospital from fundraising efforts by the Women's Auxiliary and by the Men's Associates were presented by Mrs. Theodora Feldberg and Albert J. Isgur, presidents of the two organizations. The principal address was delivered by Stuart H. Altman, PhD, dean of the Florence Heller Graduate School at Brandeis University and a trustee of Beth Israel.

Excerpts of the remarks by Mr. Feldberg, Dr. Rabkin, and Dean Altman are included in this report.

Other highlights of the annual meeting included election of trustees and officers; recognition of years of service by the medical and dental staffs; and presentations of citations of honor.

On the Cover: Dr. Susan Block, resident in primary care internal medicine, with one of her patients at Beth Israel. About one-third of the residents and internes in medicine and surgery at Beth Israel are women, as are more than half of the residents in obstetrics-gynecology. About one-fifth of medical school graduates in the US today are women, a proportion that has increased in recent years to reflect the growing role that women are playing in medical and surgical care.

Report of the President, Stanley H. Feldberg

This sixty-third year of our Hospital's history has been one of which we have a right to feel proud. Consider the times we are in: economic, political, and social uncertainty; conflicting and growing demands from the publics we serve; feckless regulations from government agencies; rapidly changing technology — and yet, despite all of these, we emerged from fiscal 1978 in a sound financial position. The preliminary results indicate an excess of revenue over expense of more than $960,000. The reasons:

First, higher patient volume than budgeted — both inpatient and outpatient, together with higher ancillary activity. Second, effective control of expenses — despite higher volume, operating expenses remained essentially within the budget of $55.3 million. Third, a favorable court-mandated welfare rate adjustment received in April. Finally, third-party settlements for prior years that were higher than budgeted.

"What was especially notable was the atmosphere of kindness and consideration to the patient."
A Beth Israel Patient

This kind of performance doesn't happen by itself. Beth Israel is a complex institution with more than 2,500 employees and an annual budget this year approximating $70 million. The kind of planning, allocation of resources, careful budgeting, and administrative imagination required to operate such an enterprise successfully take skill to develop and cooperation to administer and carry out. The lay trustees and the professional administrators and chiefs of service over the past decade must share the credit with all the staff for a robust, efficient Hospital that has a justified reputation for medical excellence and humanitarian care.

This has been a special year in many ways. Remember the Blizzard of '78? As with many catastrophies, it tended to bring out the best in people. At Beth Israel, for a whole week, people managed to get to work on everything from skis to US Army half-tracks. Most important was that care

"The idea behind the Urban Medical Group, as the doctors call themselves, is to reverse the exodus of family doctors from the inner city — and with real savings to the government . . . of patients would not suffer, and in a crowded Hospital whose patients — plus some visitors and relatives — could not leave for up to a week, nobody lacked for that care.

This was also a year that saw us revitalizing our close ties to our origins in the Jewish Community of Greater Boston. For example, we began a regular shuttle-bus service between Ulin and Leventhal Houses and BIAC, our ambulatory care center. We have been working closely with Combined Jewish Philanthropies on planning for their community facility. As part of its ongoing commitment to and special relationship with the community, Beth Israel continued to extend free medical and dental care to Russian Jews and Israeli students referred to us by other agencies. Last year, that free care exceeded $225,000.

The fourth floor of the Gryzmish Building was reopened, adding 20 beds to bring us up to our full licensed complement of 452 beds; the hemodialysis unit was moved to more suitable quarters in the old operating room area; and the renovation of Kirstein Hall was begun.

Beth Israel Hospital made many medical news headlines during the year. Among the features carried in the media were the BI-sponsored Urban Medical Group; the development of a multidisciplinary program for treating so-called "port wine" stain birthmarks with a laser; and the opening of our Alternative Birth Center.

"The ABC provides a private, homelike atmosphere, and a single bed in which the woman can labor and deliver with appropriate obstetrical support — primary nurses, nurse-midwives, and obstetricians."

During the year we began a regular program of public discussions on topics related to woman's health. The series brings members of our ob/gyn medical and nursing staffs in touch with the public, and attendance at the informal sessions has grown each month.

We had a successful energy cost-savings program that was initiated early in 1978 by a committee of employees. We estimate that their efforts have reduced by as much as $200,000 the expense that the Hospital would otherwise have had to invest in energy consuming equipment and procedures.

The year of celebration and recognition of 50 years as a major Harvard teaching hospital, and 50 years on Brookline Avenue, reached its climax at a glorious "First Fifty" fundraising gala. Thousands of friends of BI packed Symphony Hall for a Jane Olivor concert and hundreds continued the festivities at a dinner-dance at the Park Plaza Hotel. The day was an outstanding success by any measure. Fittingly, as we spent the day recollecting our past, we were helping to build a better Hospital for the future.

I am proud of our management team and their trustee advisors when I tell you that we are budgeting for a break-even year in fiscal 1979. But our optimism must be guarded. As far as health is concerned, the waters ahead are uncharted, but will not likely be calm. This much is certain, however. We have the administration and staff to lead us in the future. Their past performance of excellence is testimony to the outstanding leadership and direction of our General Director, Dr. Mitchell T. Rabkin. Their unstinting devotion to the work at hand is a credit to them and a pleasure to us.

This much, too, is certain: the same spirit, imagination, and effort that brought Beth Israel to its present eminence will stand it in good stead for the tomorrows, no matter how uncertain.

"So last Sunday's event was a glorious success, benefiting the hospital. An afternoon Jane Olivor concert at Symphony Hall was followed by a buffet dinner-dance at The Park Plaza Hotel and a slide video presentation of the day's events."

Unlike a conventional business which sets out simply to deliver a product, we are charged with other responsibilities as well — to develop ways you won't need our product, to focus on prevention of disease as well as its cure, to emphasize less costly ambulatory diagnosis and treatment rather than inpatient care. We must also look to our academic responsibilities, the challenge to uncover new knowledge and translate it into benefit for the patient. We must also look to our close relation with the community that established Beth Israel and continues to be its major source of support.

One way for us to combat the rising costs of health care is to increase productivity, to do more for patients but use relatively fewer resources, including dollars, time, supplies, and people. We've increased productivity this year by caring for more patients without a proportionate increase in the personnel involved. We've increased productivity in the outpatient service by developing a computerized appointment system so that lost appointments and schedule conflicts are eliminated. Incidentally, the computer can help humanize the hospital. Our bills now provide a much clearer explanation of the charges and they give you a specific phone number, a real person's name and, ultimately, a knowledgeable and helpful response if you have questions. We've installed a mechanical spreader in our laundry which replaces the tedious four-hand operation of spreading out the damp clean sheets as they go into the mangle. When you iron several thousand pieces of flatware daily, such a productivity boost can make a big difference.

Another way to do better comes through critical self-review, department by department. For example, a special project subcommittee of the Finance Committee teamed with psychiatrists and administrators and made recommendations which have improved productivity in the Psychiatry Clinic and allowed us to care for more patients. Our Dental Clinic was reorganized and now has a growing patient volume and a break-even bottom line. The Department of Environmental Services examined its handling of housekeeping supplies with a resulting decrease in costs by 15 percent with no decrease in service. The Blood Bank, Pharmacy, Maintenance and Purchasing departments were reorganized, with new operating heads. We developed an Equipment Center to centralize control of common-use equipment from wheelchairs to cardiac monitors and keep them in good repair.

"If more hospitals would follow the lead of innovative institutions like Beth Israel, we'd soon see a welcome return to medicine on a more human scale."
Prevention Magazine

Our Home Care department has moved into the division of Nursing Services and has begun to grow. Home Care is available for private patients as well as patients of our House Staff. Our Nursing Service, incidentally, is now widely known for its achievements in primary nursing and for the exceptional professionalism of our staff.

We've developed an Appeals procedure for employees who might feel discriminated against in the application of Hospital policy. We've started pre-retirement seminars for employees nearing completion of their working careers.

Our achievements reflect the intelligence, good taste and enthusiasm brought to their jobs by the many people who make up Beth Israel. It is their commitment to do well, their capacities to innovate and their great capabilities that allow us to do better. With this breadth of interests, abilities and activities, we continue to focus very sharply on direct, warm patient care. That's what makes up Beth Israel Hospital today. We hope it continues that way and even better in the years to come. With your valued interest and support, we are confident it will.

Brandeis University

I have been asked to speak before you about what Washington is thinking, and I realize my task isn't easy because the story I'm going to tell is not the most pleasant. It would be much easier for me to tell you the good things that I see in Beth Israel, and I truly have, and how really warm and comfortable my wife and I feel in Boston, and how close I feel. I say that not only because of my strong sense of being part of Beth Israel, but as I look about this room, I see many friends of Brandeis, an institution which I have become very close to in a very short period of time. It was easy for me to make haranguing speeches before Boards of Trustees and hospital administrators when I was in Washington. First of all, I was several hundred, if not thousands of miles away from the day-to-day activities of that particular institution and before they realized what I was saying, I got on an airplane and flew away with federal marshalls as protection. Now I have neither the airplane nor the marshalls.

"'National health insurance also may be a concept whose time had come, but now it's gone,' Stuart H. Altman, dean of the Heller Graduate School at Brandeis University, told the annual meeting of the Beth Israel Hospital."
The Boston Globe

I know that life is more complicated than my friends in Washington indicate and I know that, as Mitch Rabkin and as Stanley Feldberg have pointed out, the Hospital is doing a lot to control costs, and that surely this industry has been subject to a lot of verbal abuse, if not downright tough regulations, in the years since the early 1970's.

But my friends in Washington keep reminding me that the hospital industry in particular and health care in general remain the only major sector of our economy which has what they consider a bottomless well at the other end of the checkbook; that this industry can still call not only on the federal government, but also on state governments, and most private insurance companies to write the checks that they think are necessary; that we as a Hospital still live in what's called a cost-based reimbursement system, which many of you in business know is not the most efficient way to create incentives to efficient management and to make tough decisions. It is not that hospitals don't try, but rather that the incentives and the environment are not right, and in fact, it is that environment which many of the people in Washington want to change. I try to explain to them that there are many pressures that government puts on us as hospital people — safety regulations, all kinds of requirements of accounting forms, all kinds of administrative overload, triple and double-triple audits, malpractice insurance increases, on and on. From your vantage point, and now from mine, the hospital reimbursement controls at the federal level and at the state level — including the fact that the Certificate of Need Laws make it downright impossible for many needed capital expansions to go forward, and the fact that federal and state programs have significant controls on physician fees — make it clear that not only is it not a bottomless well, I think you can begin to ask whether there will be any water left in the well at all.

But, my friends in Washington say that when all is said and done, nothing has changed. The facts are that between 1976 and 1978, government spending for Medicare and Medicaid alone increased by 40% with almost all of the increase due to inflation and more services, very little of it for new patients or new types of admissions. That 40% translates into over $4 billion. It's expected that in this year, fiscal year 1979, the federal government alone will spend in excess of $40 billion for health care under Medicare and Medicaid. While these numbers are staggering, of even more consequence is that the increase last year for these two programs was $5½ billion. That is as much as the federal government spends on all of its other health activities combined.

Joe Califano, the current Secretary of HEW, whom many of you have read about and some of you may know, is no wallflower. He is an activist. The increased dollars that he had to spend last year for the entire department amounted to $5.6 billion of which $5.5 billion went to Medicare and Medicaid. So he was left with $100 million of new money to do all of the good things that he thought about in the eight years while he waited for the administrations to change. It's no wonder that President Carter has become the third straight president to put hospital cost control on the top of his domestic legislative agenda.

In the last days of the Congress, a hospital-cost-containment bill almost became law. It passed the Senate but there was insufficient time, and some behind-the-scenes lobbying, so that the House never got a chance to vote on it. Therefore it died, along with several other health bills. You can be sure, however, that these bills will be on the top of the legislative agenda come January 1979, when Congress reconvenes.

The hospital industry has been actively supporting a voluntary cost containment program, whereby hospitals would be committed to reducing their expenditures by 2% this year and another 2% next year. But in my view a voluntary control program cannot be effective for very long. The pressures facing this industry are so great that even with the best of intentions and the hard work of able administrators, the ability to bring about really significant reductions in the rate of spending will not happen without a struggle. I'm afraid we're in a difficult situation, where any meaningful cuts can only come about

"Beth Israel . . . has introduced an Alternative Birth Centre, an attempt to demedicalise childbirth as much as possible while maintaining all necessary back-up down the corridor should complications occur."
Spare Rib, London, England, Feminist Publication

against the better judgment of most medical professionals. Unfortunately, these controls will impact to some extent on the quality of medical care. I hope that the controls would not be so serious that they would affect life-or-death decisions. But I'm sure that at the first sign of new controls, some medical professionals will be arguing that point of life-or-death decisions. And even with the best intentions, we can't be sure how successful any cost-control legislation will be or what consequences it will bring. But the problem is too great to do nothing about.

A lot of other activities are ongoing in Washington. HEW has been strongly supporting the continued growth of health maintenance organizations. Our Harvard Community Health Plan, which the Beth Israel was instrumental in helping to get going, is a good prototype of such a plan. And they are trying at the federal level to see that these activities continue. While the number of people served in HMO's has doubled since 1971, it still represents only 3% of the population. But the trend is

"The study, analyzing data from 15,846 live births at Beth Israel Hospital, did find, however, that among very-high-risk births, as many as one in 100 infants might be saved by the [fetal monitoring] procedure."

clearly on the upward side. Big business is very much involved now with health care and in many parts of the United States it is big business which is supporting the introduction of these HMO's. It is hoped that a proliferation of these HMO's will give the competitive spirit in the health economy a crack at reducing costs without having to rely on regulations. We have learned that HMO's do have an impact on controlling hospitalization rates. Unfortunately, I think a potential battle is brewing between traditional fee-for-service medicine and such new types of delivery systems, and I hope that Beth Israel continues to be on what I consider to be the right side of that issue.

In addition to HEW, there are increasing rumblings about more competition in the health industry. The Federal Trade Commission has now ruled, at least preliminarily, that it is unlawful for medical societies to prevent their members from advertising. They have shown through their studies that lack of advertising inhibits competition and therefore, in the good free-enterprise spirit that we all love in the United States, by preventing advertising we are preventing competition in the health sector. As you might expect, the AMA was not silent when the FTC made such a ruling. As a matter of fact, one of the high officials of the AMA said, "If they (meaning the FTC) continue to pursue this line of inquiry, they're in for a hell of a fight.". And having been on the other side of some of the AMA fights, I know he knows what he's talking about. I think we will see, in the coming months, some interesting battles between the AMA on one hand and the federal government on the other.

"We knew we would have this privacy, this intimacy, and could concentrate on just having our baby."
A Beth Israel Mother

While government bureaucrats might like to hide from these issues, and just leave things the way they are, taxpayers won't let them. When all gets said and done, the budget that's the biggest and the budget that's going to be affected by Proposition-13-type cuts is not highways, it's not little signs in the street, it's going to be the Medicaid budgets at the state level and the Medicare budgets at the federal level, because that's where the bucks are. And so the country, the taxpayers, are saying to the local and federal officials, no more status quo, you have to come to grips with controlling health care costs.

". . . everyone seemed responsible, and willing to be responsible."
A Beth Israel Patient

What's particularly troubling about this dilemma is that unless we find a way to control health care costs we may have to renege on the basic concepts which established the Medicare and Medicaid programs. In basic concept, they said that everyone, rich or poor, young or old, sick or healthy, should have financial access to high-quality medical care. We should not have a system which relegates everyone who can't pay their medical or insurance bills to the city or county hospital; we ought to have a system in this country that finances the health care of our senior citizens and our poor in the same way that you and I receive our care. But with government faced with the need to reduce the dollars it spends on Medicare and Medicaid, I fear that we could revert back to what existed in the '50's, in which the poor and many of the elderly that don't have the means were forced to seek care in county and city hospitals. That is not an option that I would like to see. As a matter of fact, I still have a glimmer of hope that we may someday see this country join every other industrialized country with some form of national health insurance. I don't mean a national health insurance run completely by the government, but a financial blanket which protects us all against the high cost of medical care. Unfortunately, the likelihood of seeing national health insurance in the immediate future is very, very small. Either because of overall inflationary pressures, the need to control the deficit, or the need to control hospital costs, national health insurance may have been a subject whose time had come, and gone, but hopefully will come again.

"My primary doctor was a very competent and understanding physician. I appreciate the concern she showed and the professional competence she displayed. The nurses were great."
A Beth Israel Patient

Now, don't lose heart. For those of you who would like to join me, I'm thinking of putting together a new parlor game and calling it "Government." This is the way we're going to play it. First of all, you have to develop the art form called "compromise." Second, you have to think "Rube Goldberg." The key to putting together a strategy that's going to get us out of this mess is to come up with a compromise which fits together, that is, a little bit of each of the scenarios I've described. I'm sure that what's going to come out is not going to look pristine pure and for those of you who think in terms of purity, I'm afraid you're going to be disappointed. There's no question in my mind that we will see some form of hospital cost control enacted in the next session of Congress. I'm hopeful that it won't be so serious that an institution like Beth Israel will be forced to reduce the quality of its care. Second, I am also convinced that the competitive strategy will go forward. We will see a continued growth in the population served by HMO's, although I don't expect it to become a dominant form of health care for many years to come, if ever. Third, I do see us having more competition through advertising. And unfortunately, I think we are going to see some cutbacks in the rate of increase in spending by government on

"Not once was something done to me without a calm and careful explanation of what and why."
A Beth Israel Patient

Medicare and Medicaid, at least in the short run. So we will have a little of all four strategies. For those of you who are upset and would like one of the pure strategies to prevail, I can only encourage you to think: suppose one of those four was selected and it turned out to be your worst choice? We've got to deal with the realities of a very tough, no-win situation.

I appreciate the invitation to be with you, and wish you well. Thank you very much.

General Statement

Beth Israel Hospital is a 452-bed teaching hospital affiliated with Harvard Medical School. It is one of Boston's largest general hospitals with extensive inpatient services and a broad range of ambulatory care including a walk-in clinic and 24-hour emergency unit, and medical research and teaching facilities. Beth Israel recently completed its first half-century as a major Harvard teaching hospital on Boston's Brookline Avenue.
